Xavier Symons

BA Adv. (Hons), MA (Res.) (USyd)
University of Notre Dame Australia

Xavier Symons (BA Adv. (Hons), MA (Res.) (USyd)) is a Research Associate in the Institute for Ethics and Society, University of Notre Dame Australia. He is also PhD candidate with the Centre for Moral Philosophy and Applied Ethics at the Australian Catholic University. Xavier's research interests range from ethical issues at the beginning and end of life, to conscientious objection in medicine and the role of religion in medical practice. He also has an interest in Catholic social teaching and the ethics of healthcare resource allocation. He will shortly submit his PhD thesis, which focuses on the allocation of lifesaving healthcare resources.

Xavier has taught Catholic Social Teaching and bioethics at the ACU for several years, and has worked with the Catholic healthcare sector on several projects related to ethics education. Xavier has also had significant international research exposure. In 2018, Xavier was awarded the first annual Pellegrino Young Scholar's Essay Prize, and award administered by the Pellegrino Centre for Clinical Bioethics at Georgetown University. He was also the recipient of the 2018 Archbishop Mannix Travelling Scholarship – an award that he is using to complete a Master of Studies in Practical Ethics at the University of Oxford. From February 2016 to January 2019, Xavier was a lay member of the Austin Hospital's Human Research Ethics Committee. He is also a regular contributor to the online bioethics news-service BioEdge.

About the Course
